PROJECT : WARNING!

NEW MODUS OPERANDI WITH REGARDS TO
THEFT IN STORES
(Part 2)

A NEW MODUS OPERANDI CONCERNING THEFT IN STORES HAS COME TO THE ATTENTION OF SPECIALISED SECURITY SERVICES AS RESULT OF THE EXTENSIVE GROUNDWORK DONE BY OUR SPECIALIST INVESTIGATORS.

Modus operandi

- Syndicates recruit women from neighbouring countries.
- These syndicates take all documentation from the women: their ID-documents and passports, as well as all their electronic devices such as cell phones.
- The women are mostly uneducated and cannot speak English or any other indigenous language.
- They are taken in groups of up to 4 women to various Malls, where they are sent into the major supermarkets to steal only items such as baby formula, baby nappies, beauty products, etc.
- When the women leave the store, they rendezvous at a pre-arranged destination to hand over the products.
- From there, they go to the next store to do the same.
- Whilst in the stores, there is also a dedicated person watching them and making sure they hand-over every item they take.
- The women earn up to R400.00 per day.

Syndicates

- The perpetrators are said to be working for a syndicate.
- They never go directly to the leaders of the syndicate - the loot is collected from the thieves by the syndicate.
- When the women are caught, they have no identification on them and no phones.
- They cannot speak the local language and therefore there are no leads to the syndicate.

- Usually, the women are repatriated to their country of origin or the syndicates pay for their bail and they are released.
- The syndicates ensure that the fingerprints are lost in the process, and as such, they are never linked to any outstanding warrants of arrest.
- Some have up to 10 warrants of arrest outstanding.
- This makes it evident that these syndicates have corrupt officials who assist in the process.
