FARM ATTACK - Gert Terblanche (68), assisted 2 black male attackers when they wanted to buy sheep. They said that they would load the sheep and that his workers did not need to come along. After they left the loading area they asked Terblanche to stop. They pulled him out of the bakkie and he was threatened with a firearm. They chained him to the bakkie with two chains, one around his neck and the other around his arms. The chains was secured with locks. At one point they dragged him into the veld. They took out the bakkie's battery to pour the battery acid in his eyes and throat, luckily it was a sealed unit, but then they threatened to pour poison down his throat. When family members could not get hold of him on the phone, they became worried, he is not in good health. It is assumed that the constant phoning made the attackers to fled. The stole his purse, cellphone and bakkie keys, and ran away. Tereblanche recognised one of the attackers as one of the double convicted farm murderers on the Smith's in 2005. Not certain if he already served his sentence or if he was out on parole. Terblanche leased some of the Smith's land around the time of their murders.
